REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

WHEN the fratricidal war now existing was first inaugurated by the Northern fanatical followers of abolitionism, the people of the South were thrown into a position not anticipated, that of relying upon their own resources, as well for protection from aggression, as that of self-sustaining.

A writer, under the signature of "The poor you have always with you," wisely conceived the idea of a Free Market, where the families of those who had taken up arms of defence against Northern aggression might receive supplies for their families, and called upon those gentlemen who compose the Executive Committee to assist in the enterprise, because of their having much experience during the past quarter of a century in other charitable associations, and laid before them his views and ideas, which being approved, the experiment was started.

Citizens came liberally forward and furnished gratuitously the lumber and other articles necessary to fit up the Free Market.

The Committee began in August with an exceedingly small supply, which has subsequently grown into full portion for all the applicants. On the 16th of same month the Free Market was duly inaugurated.

The City Council, in view of the patriotism of our citizens responding so promptly to the calls of our authorities for soldiers in defence against Northern aggression, and leaving their families without the requisite means of providing for them, with a liberal spirit passed resolutions to aid the families by semi-monthly contributions. This generous act on the part of the Council, instead of accomplishing the desired end, had quite a contrary effect, producing inposition upon imposition to such an extent, that they in their efforts to correct the evil cast their views towards the Free Market, and resolved to appropriate the balance of the money they had provided for the families to the Free Market.

The Committee, with the view of rendering aid to the families of our absent volunteers, arranged with the members of the Council that they should issue the tickets and the Committee would fill them. The object of this precautionary measure was because the Aldermen of the Districts and Wards were supposed to be better acquainted with the families most deserving of the bounty, than the Committee.

Circulars were distributed through the country, announcing the establishment of the Free Market, and, with a promptness only to be met with by Louisianians, the Market was amply supplied with vegetables, beef, and funds. Even the slaves on plantations apportioned a part of their own produce to feed the families of our gallant soldiers, who were battling against the fanatics of the North, the oppressors of the South, and enemies of the slave. The colored ladies of New Orleans, not to be behindhand in the good work, started a Fair for the benefit of the Free Market, and realized the handsome sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to which a voluntary contribution was made by one of them of twenty dollars.

At the commencement of the Market, the Committee laid their plans carefully, to give facility to the families they would have to supply, and yet their minds could not realize how long the market would exist.

It is gratifying to the Committee, in the performance of the arduous duties and responsibilities as the almoners of the contributions of our citizens to the families of our soldiers, that there has been much pleasure manifested by them in this good work. A rigid system had to be observed and carried out. Parties among themselves would be riotous, using indecorous language to each other, finding fault at the quantity and quality of the provisions given. For every misconduct, the Committee have ever been prompt to punish according to the offense, in cancelling their marketing one or two markets, as the case might be. A large proportion of the recipients came to market dirty, and many, the worse for liquor; their dispositions full of strife, and almost void of the elements of civilization: the Committee now carefully observe the change among them, by this discipline, counsel and advice. The improvement in the morals of the recipients, in courtesy to each other, in their amiability, and more especially in their cleanliness, has remedied this to a great extent.

It is certainly gratifying to every mind, to witness the grateful hearts and the outbursts of their thankfulness. 'Tis true, there has been much imposition, which still exists; but this is quietly and gradually being weeded out.

The exaction of the marriage certificate, where the husband has been regularly mustered into the service, and where the father is dead, or so incapacitated by sickness or disease as to be unable to earn a living, and by proof that their son having been their support, and that son a regular mustered soldier of the Confederate or State service, is required by the Committee, and has prevented imposition.

The Market Committee were compelled, a few weeks since, to stop issuing charity tickets, on account of so many applications from the navy, they being equally entitled; besides, a great number of families whose head was a soldier, and the wife struggling for months to support her children, was compelled, as a last resort, to receive the benefits of the Market. These, together with the recent mustering of new regiments, are the reasons why charity tickets for the time are suspended; and had it not been for this course, the Market could not long exist.

The members of the Committee have stood to their work, as purely devoted almoners, with energy and zeal.

There is a striking coincidence in the history of the Market, to look back at what good has been done—the great number of families supplied—the vast quantities of provisions required at each market—and that it has been the spontaneous outburst of benevolence is scarcely realizable, and yet it has been done, and the prospects good—surely our soldiers' families "hath hope." No appeals have ever been made for this Market—no solicitation of money or kind, by subscription (except Mr. Lawrence, in Attakapas and Red River, to explain the objects of the Market). The mind, at such an institution being so supplied, pauses, and the heart at once gives thanks to the Great Heavenly Father, who, in His Providence, so plainly exhibits His great goodness.

There are periods in the history of nations, when God more plainly shows His watchfulness to one, than another; and surely our Confederacy cannot but acknowledge it.

The Committee, in rendering this statement of their labors, take pleasure in returning thanks to the generous donors, whether by individuals, associations, companies, pleasure-seeking parties, or otherwise.

The Committee cannot forbear making mention of the liberality of the several railroad companies — steamboat owners, captains, clerks, and agents, wharfingers, draymen and others, for transporting and delivering at the Market, free of charge, all donations sent through these various channels.

The Committee, in rendering their report, would remark, that many articles which they received, the donator not having sent his name, rendered it difficult for them to return the sacks, barrels, &c.; but have done so in every instance where they have had the proper address.

In submitting this historical synopsis of the Free Market to all who have contributed to its object, the Committee would beg reference to the tabular statements of the receipts of money and kind, and the disbursements made, since its organization—the number of families supplied—from which they may be enabled to deduce the management of the trust confided to their keeping.

We cannot close this synopsis without expressing our thanks to the kind friends who, having watched closely the provision market, from time to time advised and recommended the purchase of articles having an upward tendency in value from the reduced stock in market, as also the liberal manner in which they supplied such articles as were needed at one half the market value: while to the planters generally, for their liberal and constant donations, we would be derelict of duty, should we not thus acknowledge their generosity. At the same time, we herewith tender to the masters of steamers, the agents of railroads, the draymen, and others, for their kind, generous and liberal conduct towards assisting in every respect the efforts of the Committee in this the noblest charity extant, our sincere thanks.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

No person will be admitted a member of the Market Committee without the sanction of the Executive Committee, and the objection of one shall be sufficient to reject, without requiring any explanation.

That hereafter, the Free Market shall be closed at one o'clock, P. M., punctually, and no provisions shall be delivered after that hour.

That the instructions given in reference to the quantities of articles to be distributed, in accordance with the number of persons in a family, shall in no instance be exceeded.

The object of these regulations is to enable the Committee to carry out the principles of the institution, viz: the support of the families of our patriotic citizens, who are engaged in the defense of our country

There are now on record and being supplied, upwards of eighteen hundred families at each market. It is therefore imperative and necessary, for the continuance of the Market, that the rules laid down for the distribution of the articles in the Market, shall be rigidly enforced.
